Excerpt from Nature in Disease: An Address Before the Norfolk District Medical Society of Massachusetts, at the Annual Meeting, May 12, 1852 It may be said, and with truth, that this is a difficult question to decide - that single cases vary greatly in character - that the constitution and state of the patient are not the same, for any two individuals - that in its tendency, severity and complications, each case differs from every other; But all this does not alter the proposition. I From such cases we are constantly proclaiming the value of certain remedies, and deducing plausible theories of treatment. Aye, but the experiment - who will be bold enough to try it? The sin of omission in practice is the unpardonable of offences. To have tried everything that could be thought of is the impregnable retreat of the baffled practitioner, and a balmy sedative to the bereaved. Nevertheless, until the benefits of the prescription over its omission be known, the administration of a drug is as great and as hazardous an experiment as the withholding of...
