Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .A COLD WAR THRILLER. Set in 1952, at the height of the Cold War, The Traffic Light Syndrome gives an insight into the activities of the Communists attempts to disrupt the trade unions and infiltrate the Civil Service in Britain. Their plan, to install a high ranking communist into position within a government department that will allow them access to strategy and policy making, was both clever and manipulative. Their interference within the print and dockers unions was designed to stifle public opinion and create unrest within a country still suffering from the ravages of war. Polly Spencer, stumbles on the plot within the civil service and informs her ward Daniel Bottomley. He had been approached by a concerned trade unionist within the printing industry and was aware of the continuing unrest in the docks and the attempts by communist agitators to call a national strike. Concerned about the violence and intimidation tactics being used in the docks, Daniel, who is with MI6, decides that it needs to be investigated. In 1952, rationing is still very much in place and there are still many shortages of essential food items, fuel is scarce as are many goods to buy in the shops.These uncertainties and fears about the future are being exploited by the communists who are experts at manipulating the concerns and doubts among the population over our very survival. They use threats and intimidation to secure positions within the trade union movement and so spread their communist propaganda, but the efforts of their agents in the Civil Service is discovered by Polly Bottomley, quite by chance when going about her everyday business. Together with Daniel, she uncovers a deep conspiracy to take...
